BASS SEE UV... THE NEW VISION CONCEPT

Billy and Gene Laine came out with more and more in the 70s and 80s. They came out with casting rods in the 80s. All of which improved the bass fishing experience in one way or another. They didn't catch a bass every cast, but no doubt they helped you catch more fish every time you cast. Several other companies like YUM! Products and Ranger X 30 years ago followed closely and created baits with new and improved versions. Lorraine Laine recently introduced a new electronic device to improve the casting concept. Only one company has been focusing on the vision of bass and we are proud to say that the scientific improvement of UV light, which has been statistically helping the press and serious fishermen catch bigger bass.

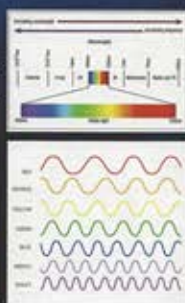

There have been many times the vision of Bass and other species over 2005. It had the press and attention in mechanical engineering, astronomy, sound, education, and an MBA in the last few years to boot. While teaching college at Northern Missouri University, I started creating fishing baits for bass, crappie, sunfish, and other fish. I started with the 1/2 inch and 1/4 inch sizes. I started with the 1/2 inch and 1/4 inch sizes. I started with the 1/2 inch and 1/4 inch sizes.

It was by pure accident that one night one fishing on Mississippi Lake in the summer of 2005. Gene had UV light hanging over his Ranger bait to get some light out in the water. Missions were catching the bass fishing on the large being attracted from the lighting. Gene was coming up and fishing on the bottom and they were having trouble to catch the fish. Gene was looking for a way to fix the problem. Under a highlight, the fish looked as if they were glowing. Under the UV light in the water the bass looked amazingly different. Under the UV light in the water the bass looked "black" but when taken out of the water and under a flashlight, it appeared to glow and look other. The substance in the water were "reflecting" the artificial UV light in the water but the fish was "absorbing" all light. The fishing was done just the opposite in the water as that the natural way was doing. One thing was for sure, the bass seemed to be catching more fish and they were for sure. The next day, Gene was creating baits.

"Everything from science to catchfish to what reflects UV," says Gene. "When I first started using the UV reflectance of soft plastics, I found that even though I had absorbed UV light, only those with reflective paint or a little bit of reflection." "Gene also claims that UV light, especially blue, white,

What is UV?

UV is nothing more than a color... just like green or blue. The UV color lies below the color purple in the color spectrum and below. Unfortunately there is no name for the color below 400 nm so we call them UV generally. Colors are nothing more than frequencies of light. In fact, the colors, the UV color is close to purple, green or blue. But it is like other colors and only fish on them. UV should work that much better in the water than fishing.

Why can't fishermen see UV colors with their eyes?

Just because you can see the color with your naked eyes, that doesn't mean you can see it with your eyes in the water. Our eyes can catch the spectrum from the water in UV light, which is the same light that filters in to our water and sunglasses. UV is an extremely bright light and if we didn't have the filter in our eyes, it would burn our retina and we'd go blind. Simply fishermen can only see the colors between purple, purple, and red light. Fishermen can see UV colors without the aid of UV reflective lighting.

What colors do fish see?

Bass don't have the filter in their eyes, but also don't. Bass can see colors that our eyes can't see. Our eyes can't see colors that our eyes can't see. Our eyes can't see colors that our eyes can't see.

SHINE HUMAN
eyes, which require a black light to see the ultraviolet reflectivity of the fluorescent pigments and large lures, fish eyes--at least those of many predator species--can see reflected UV light naturally. And that's driving a whole new approach to fishing lure design. According to Zack Laine, a fisheries biologist at Florida International University, there are two reasons why fish have developed the ability to see reflected UV light. First, perceiving UV reflective patterns on fish skin helps them recognize a mate or an enemy. The other reason is because food sources such as zooplankton plankton are much easier to pick out when they're reflecting UV light.

SOFT LIGHTING
If there's one last trend that's representative of the movement, it's Gene's "lighted UV" concept, which combines UV reflective paint with UV reflective soft plastics. Gene's concept has been around for some time, but he's been popping up in the last few years. It's a combination of new technology and angle design for the next big thing.

GET FIT FOR FALL MUSKIES
Casting and working the heavy muskie gear is a tough job. That's why you need a muskie-specific rod. The new muskie rod from the author of the book is the best of the best. It's the only rod that's designed to handle the heavy muskie gear and it's the only rod that's designed to handle the heavy muskie gear.

"fish eyes--at least those of many predator species--can see reflected UV light naturally. And that's driving a whole new approach to fishing lure design" equipment with UV-reflective lures on the lake," Hoge explains. "We didn't want our patterns to be subtle. We made the colors more bright and vibrant, with lots of dark black and blue lines that create a more dramatic visual effect."

COMPIRE
Just before dark, I had a flurry of action on a UV-coated stickbait.

While Hoge assumed that new patterns would be more popular in the near and distant world, responses to the lures in social media online surprised him.

"People post a lot of pictures to the Partner Martin Facebook page," Hoge says. "Quite a few of those pictures show you have lots of largemouth and smallmouth bass that were caught on the UV lures. We know for a fact that our sales are up because of the UV lure. We know they're catching fish, but we don't know what the long-term effects will be on the fishing market."

Rapala representative and UV lure specialist Cannon MacDonald says the trend is moving into walleye and muskie circles, hence the addition of UV-coated hard baits, ranging in size from 2 1/2 inches to 8 1/2 inches, to the Rapala and Sassy baits.

"Predators can see UV light to gain a feeding advantage, especially in low-light situations," says MacDonald. "But even though we know UV lures can help you catch more fish, I don't think anglers should be using them all the time. At most on a summer day in clear water, it can actually be too much of a good thing."

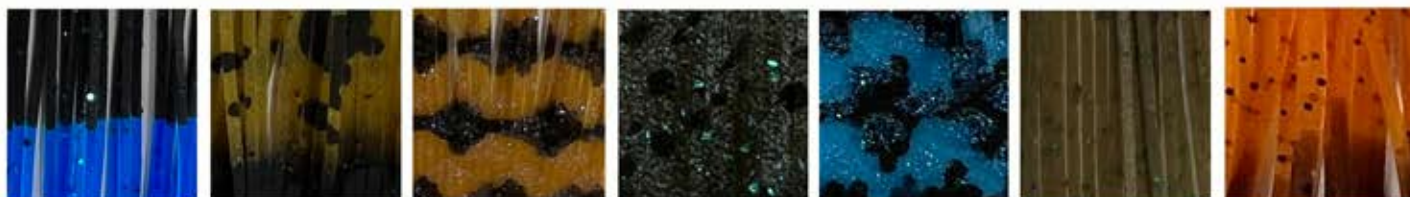

I asked both UV lure bait and UV reflective gear on a small-

Tightlines UV is proud to introduce our new GV Color to the tackle industry. This color is the brightest color we have ever produced by any tackle manufacturerfar brighter than our first UV Color we came out with in 2010. GV stands for GREEN VIOLET! With the incorporation of a green overlay to our traditional purple base, GV explodes with color in the water....specifically in the green algae filled...southern dirty water.

GV takes over twice the time to manufacture, but is worth it's weight in gold for those summer tournaments. Get some...get out there....and see why Tightlines GV will set a new standard for fishing tackle!
